HollisWealth[®]

Greetings from Herb and Andrew

After much mudslinging, controversy and unexpected twists and turns, the US presidential election finally came to an end. The outcome shocked a lot of people, both in the US and around the world. Pollsters and the political press were caught completely off guard.

A few weeks have passed now, and acceptance has begun to settle in. President-elect Donald Trump campaigned on a platform that promised change. Time will tell if he is able to follow through on his plans. He's said that he would like to focus most of his initial efforts on creating jobs and enhancing the economic situation for working-class Americans. If he and his government are able to make headway in this area, it bodes well for Canada, as history has shown that when America enjoys economic success, our country benefits as well.

Mr. Trump has proven to be a person who gets things done as a business man. We are cautiously optimistic he can do the same for his country as its new President.

What Our Clients Are Asking

"You're now called Rempel Capital. Are you still with HollisWealth?"

Answer: Yes, we've adopted a new brand name—Rempel Capital—but we are still affiliated with HollisWealth. In fact, our official company name is "Rempel Capital, HollisWealth, a division of Scotia Capital Inc." One thing that has changed, though, is the location of our office. We are now located at 238 Wellington Street East, Suite 102, in Aurora, Ontario. Our clients in York Region have really appreciated the convenience of where our new office is situated (and paid us some nice compliments on our interior- design sense too!).

If you would like to stop by and see our new office for yourself and/or discuss your portfolio, please contact:

What's Trending

To date, the use of drones has been restricted to hobbyists, or activities such as photography, filmmaking and aerial inspections. What has industry watchers excited, though, is the fact that the widespread commercial use of drones is steadily approaching take off. Back in August, the US Federal Aviation Authority (FAA) announced that, in the wake of simplifying the process required to become a commercial drone pilot, it expects 600,000 commercial drones to be in the air within the year.

Here in Canada, Drone Delivery Canada, the first drone logistics company in the country, was granted an official flight certificate on Oct. 4, 2016 from Transport Canada. The company acquired this certificate in order to conduct outdoor testing within Southern Ontario.

The commercial application for drones is quite broad. Currently drones that can be used as fire bombers are being tested to help fight wildfires. Companies such as Amazon and Dominos pizza are testing drone delivery of their products. Meanwhile, in October, a US company called Zipline launched the first on-demand, drone-delivery program for medical supplies in Rwanda.

Commercial drone delivery in the US isn't expected to reach actualization until at least 2020. However, when it does eventuate, the Association for Unmanned Vehicle Systems International, the drone industry's trade group, expects the industry will produce 100,000 jobs and contribute more than $82 billion US to the economy in the first 10 years.

Market Truth?

"Buy what a new government is going to support."

Whenever a new government is elected in the US or Canada, it's an opportunity to review our models and see whether there are areas in which we could invest that would allow us to profit from what the new government is most likely to support. For example, President-elect Donald Trump campaigned promising to provide jobs for America's working class. One of the proven ways to make this happen is by pouring tax dollars into infrastructure. As managers, we may position our models to capitalize on such an initiative by investing in companies in the engineering, equipment and materials industries.
